yes but since the Secretary of State's office is charged with implementing election law, how ready are they to do that if they can only find 81 of them?

I'm looping in Dan on this so he can have a more complete view. Thanks Will.

If you look at this list, it looks like many more than 81 counties have web sites:

I know Davis was interested in questioning SOS earlier, so for her info (or for whoever is ultimately questioning the Sec of State's office), Laurie just forwarded this from 2 years ago, in which only 81 counties have websites (which are apparently required under the bill).

I just re-counted, and they still only have 81 counties listed, which means that according to the chief elections officer in Texas, 173 counties would be unable to comply with the requirements of the law.

When I was going through old emails I found this one from last time we debated voter ID. We should include a question asking the SOS the number of counties that have websites because the bill states that as part of voter education the county will list the new requirements on their website. If a county doesn't have a website.....

Here is the list of county websites the SOS has on their site

There are 81 counties listed on this page. I don't know which ones are missing but if this is accurate then 173 don't have one.

Some of the website links don't even go to websites - they go to "under construction" type pages...
